

Feature Bio – “Jack” By Char Hakes

Jack has a fun personality, often trying to be the center of attention when people come to visit. Although he seemed to get along fine with the few human males in his life before Safe Haven, he just loves women and children. When he becomes comfortable with certain female caretakers, he will seek them out for a quick back rub, wagging his tail in presumed llama bliss.

Jack has had three human families in his life, always returning to Safe Haven when the owners could no longer keep him. Jack has a history of being a good protector of goats, sheep, ducks and other small livestock and has also stood his ground among horses. He gets along well with other llamas and alpacas, making him a great candidate for adoption, as long as he has other buddies or small livestock to guard.

As of early 2009, we guess that Jack is about 13 years young and somewhere along the line he developed a slight breathing problem. His pretty white wool has thinned in places, sometimes causing his pink skin to sunburn after he lies around for hours on end soaking up the warm sun rays. One ear suffered a bite sometime in his past, but that doesn't seem to affect his proud self image. Perhaps he knows we're attracted to his cute, black eye patch. Either way, it is easy to adore this handsome, curious self-assured guy.
